GLOBAL FIRST RESPONDER

INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL CORPS

nepal
In 2015, International Medical Corps expanded its lifesaving health care and training efforts to meet the desperate and growing humanitarian needs across the globe. A sobering milestone was reached—worldwide more than 60 million people have been driven from their homes. We are currently seeing the worst crisis of forced displacement since World War II.

When people are on the move, fleeing conflict, natural disaster or disease, they are at the most vulnerable time in their lives. And International Medical Corps is committed to being there to help them.

As the year began, we remained at the forefront of a global effort to contain the largest-ever outbreak of the Ebola Virus Disease—one of the very few health care NGOs to confront the epidemic at its source in West Africa. Before the number of new cases fell close to zero at year’s end, the outbreak had claimed over 11,000 lives. While isolated new cases remain a concern, our focus has shifted to preventing Ebola’s return and strengthening health systems in the region to better tackle any new cases that occur.

In the shadow of the Ebola outbreak, International Medical Corps drew on its training expertise to join the fight in northern Nigeria to rid the world of another, far better known, infectious disease: polio.

As part of the CORE Group Polio Partnership Project, our trainers provided local health workers and volunteers the skills needed to increase polio vaccination rates that had lagged behind due to violence in a dangerous region that includes Boko Haram’s home areas. Despite continued hostilities, our efforts over a two-year period helped lift vaccination rates dramatically.

A continent away in Asia, we are extremely proud of our response to a series of major earthquakes that destroyed large swaths of the Himalayan nation of Nepal in April and May, claiming more than 8,800 lives. Facebook chose International Medical Corps as its featured partner in a worldwide campaign, raising more than $15 million to support our response. With the support of the Facebook community and thousands of generous donors, we were able to reach those in need in the most remote areas. In the year that followed, we worked with 11 local partners to reach over three-quarters of a million survivors in 118 villages and municipalities.

In late October, we responded to a second major earthquake in Asia, this time in the rugged mountains of Afghanistan and northwestern Pakistan. Our First Responders faced treks of up to four hours to deliver desperately needed health care services and psychological first aid to quake victims.

Throughout the year, we continued to assist those forced to flee their homes amid humanitarian emergencies elsewhere in the world. None of these is more tragic than the human catastrophe unfolding in and around Syria, where civil war is in its sixth year and has fueled an exodus of refugees into Europe. Witnessing the plight of these displaced families is heart-wrenching. In 2015, we assisted nearly 1.9 million individuals affected by the crisis, both Syrians displaced by fighting and host country nationals in neighboring countries whose public services have become overwhelmed by refugees.

Since our founding in 1984, International Medical Corps has delivered more than $2.2 billion in health care and program services to tens of millions of people in more than 75 countries. Training has always been and remains a centerpiece of all of our efforts—multiplying our impact, building self-reliance and creating lasting change.

We are proud of our record of accomplishments during the past year. We know that all we have accomplished is due to the support of our donors—from individuals, businesses, foundations, governments, international agencies and other partners around the world. We are deeply grateful for your commitment, partnership and support. We hope you share our pride in the impact that we have achieved together. Thank you.

BECAUSE SPEED SAVES LIVES

during the initial hours following a disaster, our Emergency Response Teams deploy fast and begin their lifesaving work immediately even in the most challenging environments.

Drawing on three decades of experience, our surge capacity includes physicians and nurses trained in emergency medicine, together with specialists who provide an array of services ranging from technical advice for nutrition, water, sanitation and hygiene to mental health and psychosocial support—all of it to assist those in need. And that’s just where we start. We stay to help survivors build a better future. We work with the community, develop partnerships at all levels and evaluate progress to ensure quality.

Our staff is recruited locally, ensuring that the knowledge required to prepare for—and respond effectively to—future emergencies remains anchored in the community so that if disaster should strike again, local residents have the tools required to be their own best First Responders.

We integrate our core strengths into programs shaped to assist local communities as they make the journey from relief to self-reliance.

EMERGENCY RESPONSE AND PREPAREDNESS

Over the past five years in Afghanistan, we have trained 19,000 volunteers to respond in a disaster; after the October earthquake these volunteers mobilized and helped rescue people trapped in their homes, while our teams provided 8,000 medical consultations using mobile medical teams.

HEALTH SERVICES SUPPORT

In South Sudan, we enrolled 177 midwifery and 44 nursing students at our three schools, to help strengthen the national health system.

FAMILY AND COMMUNITY HEALTH

In Lebanon, we provided 308,919 medical consultations at 44 health facilities and with 3 mobile medical teams, reaching refugees and members of the community in need of critical health care.

In South Sudan, 16 women die every day due to pregnancy-related complications; we attended 5,671 deliveries and provided antenatal care to 10,528 women.

In Ethiopia, at 255 outpatient treatment sites and 41 inpatient stabilization centers, we treated 13,245 children aged 6-59 months suffering from severe acute malnutrition.

In water-scarce Ethiopia, we build rainwater harvesting systems, rehabilitate boreholes, and provide hygiene training. Over the last year, we have made 214 improvements to water supply systems, benefitting more than 220,000 people.

Across the Middle East, our staff provided more than 386,270 mental health consultations to Syrian refugees and the local communities that host them.

Training lies at the heart of who we are and what we do. While International Medical Corps is well-known for its swift deployments to assist survivors of a disaster no matter where in the world it may occur, it is our commitment to training that sets us apart and enables us to bring new and lasting strength to communities as they rebuild for a better future.

Our work in 2015 underscored yet again the vital role training plays in our commitment to assist those in need as they make their journey from relief to self-reliance.

NIGERIA

In a crucial battle of a war to rid the world of polio, International Medical Corps drew on its training expertise to join the fight in northern Nigeria. To strengthen the capacity of local government workers, non-government staff and volunteers who are part of the CORE Group Polio Partnership Project, our trainers provided them the skills needed to increase polio vaccination rates. Those rates had lagged behind due to terrorist attacks and atrocities in a region that includes Boko Haram’s home areas. Despite the violence, our efforts over a two-year period helped lift vaccination rates from the 20%-30% range to an impressive 99.96% rate in our project area of Kano State and 96.8% in nearby Borno State. As those rates climbed, the number of new cases in Nigeria dropped to zero in July 2014 and remained that way for over two years. Reports of two new cases in a remote area of Borno in mid-August 2016 only intensified the sense of urgency to achieve even higher vaccination rates so that Nigeria—and with it, all of Africa—can be polio-free.

In South Sudan, we trained 32 midwives from more than 20 health facilities in remote Wau County how to use a client-centered approach to family planning counseling that links family planning services with women’s health. We complemented this with training for community-based workers who encouraged both dialogue across the generations and development of community action plans to overcome traditional barriers to family planning and other sexual and reproductive health services. The result: increased family planning and likely fewer unplanned pregnancies in a country where the average woman gives birth to seven children.

In the aftermath of last year’s earthquakes in Nepal that claimed nearly 9,000 lives, we trained more than 500 First Responders in techniques needed to administer psychological first aid to survivors—many of whom had lost everything. We also worked with local partners to train general health care staff, providing them the skills needed to integrate mental health and psychosocial services into the existing primary health care systems.

Training lies at the heart of who we are and what we do. While International Medical Corps is well-known for its swift deployments to assist survivors of a disaster no matter where in the world it may occur, it is our commitment to training that sets us apart and enables us to bring new and lasting strength to communities as they rebuild for a better future.

Together with Management Sciences for Health, Save the Children and African Field Epidemiology Network (AFENET), International Medical Corps has launched a 5-year global campaign that seeks to galvanize civil society, academia and the business community to ensure better prevention, preparedness and response to outbreaks and epidemics. The aim is to raise awareness and work with governments, multi-lateral institutions and the private sector to ensure that the world is better protected from the health threats posed by infectious diseases. Engaging a broad range of partners from across the globe, the Campaign will advocate for increased support for global and country preparedness; compliance with International Health Regulations; closing the critical gaps in health systems around infection control and prevention; and ensuring more sustainable funding for developing and maintaining the core capacities necessary to prevent, contain and respond to outbreaks and epidemics.

ADVANCING THE GLOBAL HEALTH SECURITY AGENDA

International Medical Corps is a founding member and plays a leading role in the Global Health Security Agenda Consortium (GHSAC), a coalition that supports the Global Health Security Agenda (GHSA) and its goals that include a world safe and secure from infectious disease threats and global health security as an international priority. The Consortium includes international NGOs, academic institutions and business associations that work together with interested governments to support the Agenda. Consortium members, whose missions align with the Agenda’s goals, participate in GHSAC Working Groups appropriate to their areas of expertise. International Medical Corps also participates in the “Next Generation Global Health Security Leaders” group that provides young professionals a platform to exchange ideas and contribute to the broader discussion surrounding the GHSA.

PARTNERSHIPS IN RESEARCH

With funding from the Research for Health in Humanitarian Crises (R2HC) program, International Medical Corps, in partnership with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and three other groups, is conducting research to improve newborn health care and comprehensive sexual and reproductive health in Democratic Republic of Congo’s North Kivu Province. Other research partners on the project include: University Research Co., the UN Family Planning Association, and the Democratic Republic of Congo’s Ministry of Health.

We also worked with several partners in 2015 to leverage experience gained during our unique frontline role in West Africa treating hundreds of Ebola Virus Disease patients during the 2014-2015 West African outbreak. For example, working with partners, including the Government of Sierra Leone and the Scripps Translational Science Institute, La Jolla, CA., we conducted a successful feasibility trial for a new patient monitoring system that can take vital signs without exposing a health professional directly to highly contagious Ebola patients.

STANDING PARTNERSHIPS – A FORCE FOR COLLECTIVE ADVOCACY

International Medical Corps recognizes the importance of working collaboratively and playing a leadership role in shaping humanitarian policy and practice. Accordingly, it places great value in its representation on key bodies and initiatives that help drive humanitarian action. Serving on several boards, including those of InterAction—the largest consortium of US-based humanitarian and development NGOs—and the International Council of Voluntary Agencies (ICVA), a global NGO network, provides the opportunity to work toward collective action on both policy and operational objectives. As a member of other groups and initiatives such as the Sphere Project, the Strategic Advisory Group of the Global Health Cluster, the Global Nutrition and WASH Clusters, and the Emergency Directors Group of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, International Medical Corps continues its efforts to strengthen the coordination and quality of humanitarian response.

MISSION

International Medical Corps is a global, humanitarian, nonprofit organization dedicated to saving lives and relieving suffering through health care training and relief and development programs. Established in 1984 by volunteer doctors and nurses, International Medical Corps is a private, voluntary, nonpolitical, nonsectarian organization. Its mission is to improve the quality of life through health interventions and related activities that build local capacity in underserved communities worldwide. By offering training and health care to local populations and medical assistance to people at highest risk, and with the flexibility to respond rapidly to emergency situations, International Medical Corps rehabilitates devastated health care systems and helps bring them back to self-reliance.
There are many ways you can help International Medical Corps provide lifesaving care and help communities gain self-reliance after a disaster.
